The first giants in Norse mythology. From Muspelheim in the south came lava and sparks into the great void Ginnungagap. In the middle of Ginnungagap, the air from Niflheim and Muspelheim met, the fire melted the ice and it began to drip, some of the ice started to take the shape of a humanoid creature. It was a jöunn, also called a giant, this giant was Ymir, the first giant in Norse mythology.

Creation of the World in Norse Mythology

Unfortunately for the Vikings' reputations, surviving monks and priests wrote the stories of the raids and in their descriptions, the Vikings were described as savage beasts, filthy and violent, killers one and all. This description is, of course, partly true. Vikings were very violent when they went raiding. Those were violent times.
